Jonas looks for Asher so they can do their "volunteer hours" after school. This is really the only part of the day, he notes, where he gets to decide what he wants to do (that is, where he wants to volunteer).

Both Gabe and Jonas have light, pale eyes. Because people in the community chose Sameness, it is extremely rude to talk about things that are different. Although Jonas is not often reminded of his unique eyes because mirrors are uncommon possessions in the community, Jonas knows that his light eyes are unusual. During the conversation, we learn that Birthmothers give birth to three babies over a three-year period. Each newchild is immediately taken away from its Birthmother and is cared for by Nurturers in the Nurturing Center until the newchild is placed with a family unit at the December Ceremony. Birthmothers become Laborers at the end of their three years of birthing. The people in the community are controlled by announcements and chastisements that are heard over loudspeakers. Apparently, secrets do not exist within the community. Loudspeakers are everywhere, even in the family dwellings. Jonas was once publicly chastised because he took an apple home from the Recreation Area. He broke a rule, and the next day he promptly apologized to the Recreation Director. Confused and unable to find the precise words to describe what happened to him, Jonas never told anyone why he took the apple. When children become Eights, they begin their volunteer hours. These children have the freedom to choose where they want to volunteer; however, because the hours are mandatory, it appears that even this freedom is controlled. The purpose of volunteering is to give the Committee of Elders the opportunity to observe each child in different working situations so that the Elders can make appropriate lifelong career Assignments for the children when the children become Twelves. At the beginning of Chapter 4, Jonas finds his friends, Asher and Fiona, volunteering in the House of the Old, which is like a present-day nursing home. He volunteers there also. While at the House of the Old, Jonas is instructed to help bathe the Old in the bathing room. We learn that it is against the rules for anyone to look at any naked person except at infants newchildren and the Old. While bathing a woman named Larissa, Jonas thinks that the bathing room feels safe because Larissa looks trusting and free. These feelings are ironic because people gave up their freedoms when they decided to live in a community of Sameness. Their feeling of security is an illusion, a false appearance. Larissa speaks to Jonas about the release of an Old named Roberto. Larissa corrects herself to say that all lives are meaningful. Here, Lowry uses irony once again to emphasize a key theme: The people are under the impression that their lives are meaningful, but in reality they all live meaningless lives. They behave like robots because they chose Sameness over individuality differences. Control of the people is once again emphasized when Larissa and Jonas suggest changing a rule and then laugh because it could take a lifetime or longer to get a rule changed. At the beginning of Chapter 5, during the morning ritual of telling dreams, Jonas tells his family members about his dream during the previous night. He dreamed about wanting to bathe his friend Fiona. He had pleasant feelings during the dream. She explains that all of the adults in the community take a pill every day to stifle the Stirrings – sexual desires. The pill is another way that the Committee of Elders controls people. Physical affection within the family unit is uncommon, and physical affection or touching outside of the family unit is absolutely inappropriate and rude. Jonas knows that Asher has been taking a pill but never asks him about it because it is rude to talk about such personal things. Jonas takes his pill, feeling proud and sad at the same time – proud because he is doing what all adults do, and sad because within a short time, the pleasurable feelings disappear and he feels the same as before. Birthmother a female who is assigned to give birth to three children within three years, after which she becomes a Laborer. House of the Old a facility, similar to a nursing home, in which elderly people reside and are cared for by Caretakers. Caretaker a person who cares for the elderly in the House of the Old. Collection Crew people assigned to pick up food trays left outside of dwellings. Stirrings feelings of sexual desire.

Chapter 2 : Notes on Chapter 4 from The Giver

1 The Giver Chapter 4 Jonas rode at a leisurely pace, glancing at the bikeports beside the buildings to see if he could spot Asher's. He didn't often do his.

Lily is being slightly rude: Lily also says she hopes she will be assigned to be a Birthmother when she grows up, since she likes newchildren so much, but her mother tells her that the position of Birthmother carries very little honorâ€”Birthmothers are pampered for three years while they produce children, but then do hard labor and never get to see their biological children. Jonas thinks about the Speakers who make announcements to the community over the loudspeakers all day, including reprimands to rule-breakers. He remembers a time when an announcement was specifically directed at him, though his name was not mentionedâ€”no one is singled out in his society. Jonas had taken the apple because, while playing catch with his friend Asher, he had noticed the apple change in a way he could not describe. On closer investigation, the apple remained the same shape, size, and nondescript shade as always, but then it would briefly change again, though Asher did not seem to notice. Jonas took the apple home to investigate it further, but discovered nothing. The event bewildered him. In Chapter 4, Jonas meets Asher so that they can do their mandatory volunteer hours together. Children from eight to eleven volunteer at different locations daily to develop skills and get a sense of their occupational interests. Jonas enjoys volunteer hours because they are less regulated than other hours of his dayâ€”he gets to choose where he spends them. He volunteers at a variety of places, enjoying the different experiences, and has no idea what his Assignment will be. In the bathing room, he gives a bath to an elderly woman. He appreciates the sense of safety and trust he gets from the womanâ€”it is against the rules to look at other people naked in any situation, but the rule does not apply to the Old or newchildren. They discuss the release of one of the Old, a man named Roberto. Larissa does not know what actually happens when someone is released, but she assumes it is wonderful; she does not understand why children are forbidden to attend. Analysis In these chapters, we begin to get a sense of how different Jonas is from other members of his society and also of the degree to which his society discourages differences. Jonas is both physically different, in that his eyes are a very unusual color, and mentally differentâ€”he sees the world in a different way, as illustrated by his ability to see the apple change. He is also slightly troubled by some of the strict rules that govern his society. He enjoys the closeness he gets from physical contact with the old woman and does not understand why that kind of closeness is forbidden with other people. He also enjoys having freedom of choice in a way that other people in his community do not seem to appreciate as much. He likes his volunteer hours because he can choose where to spend them, and he takes advantage of that freedom more than most people do. However, although Jonas enjoys freedom, he is still a loyal member of the community. At this point, the description of how the apple changes is slightly confusingâ€”we have no idea what happens to it when it changes. However, it is the only way that Jonas, with no experience of color, can describe what happens to the apple: Lowry gives us some hints about what happens to the apple, though. When Jonas describes the apple, he notes that it is the same size and shape as before. In the novel, the color red comes to be closely aligned to the intense emotions Jonas begins to feel during his training with the Giver.

The Celebration of Twelve is nearly upon him, and he has resolved to spend his last volunteer hours near his friend Asher. Jonas does not always choose to spend his volunteer hours with his friend because Asher sometimes struggles to take things seriously. Jonas reflects that he has experienced a little of everything in the community through volunteer work. Some children are different. Benjamin, for example, spends almost all his time in the Rehabilitation Center. He has spent so much time there that he has even developed new techniques for helping people recover after their injuries. Although Jonas would never compliment Benjamin on his skills because it could potentially lead to bragging, he admires Benjamin for his accomplishments. Still, this is better than having too few volunteer hours. Jonas once heard a story that an Eleven did not receive an assignment at the Ceremony of Twelve and had to work privately afterward. That Eleven was disgraced. Fiona, a female Eleven, is there as well. Jonas enters the house and begins to take care of Larissa, an elderly woman. She explains that one woman, Edna, was a birthmother for three years and then worked in Food Distribution for the rest of her life. She was not even allowed a family unit. Larissa jokes that maybe Edna was not very smart. In contrast, Roberto had a wonderful life, one that was truly worthy of celebration before his release. He was a teacher of Elevens, which is quite important. He also worked on the Planning Committee and designed the Central Plaza. Of course, he did not actually do any labor to build it. Roberto also raised two very successful children. Sadly, there is not really enough space in the Releasing Room for anyone but the old to attend. Jonas jokes that maybe they should propose a change over which the committee can deliberate.

Chapter 4 : SparkNotes: The Giver: Chapters 3-4

In chapter four Jonas rides his bicycle to the House of the Old where he sees the bicycles of his friend Asher and a girl named Fiona there already. The elevens need to put in volunteer hours at many places so that the elders can find what job suits them best. Jonas thinks that another eleven-year.

Chapters 1-2 Summary We are introduced to Jonas, the eleven-year-old protagonist of the story, as he struggles to find the right word to describe his feelings as he approaches an important milestone. As Jonas remembers the community reaction to the event, we learn more about the society in which he lives. It is extremely structured, with official orders transmitted through loudspeakers planted all around the community. Jonas decides he is apprehensive, not frightened, about the important thing that is going to happen in December. Jonas and his society value the use of precise and accurate language. Her parents help her to understand that the boy probably felt out of place, and she becomes less angry. The family considers taking care of the baby for a while, though they are not allowed to adopt him—every household is allowed only one male and one female child. We also learn that spouses are assigned by the government. Jonas explains his apprehensiveness about the coming Ceremony of Twelve—the time when he will be assigned a career and begin life as an adult. We learn that every December, all of the children in the community are promoted to the next age group—all four-year-old children become Fives, regardless of the time of year when they were actually born. We also learn that fifty children are born every year. The ceremonies are different for each age group. At the Ceremony of One newchildren, who have spent their first year at the Nurturing Center, are assigned to family units and given a name to use in addition to the number they were given at birth. Jonas is surprised that his father would break any kind of rule, though the members of the community seem to bend rules once in a while. For instance, older siblings often teach younger siblings to ride bicycles before the Ceremony of Nine, when they receive their first official bicycles. We do not know what it is that Jonas is afraid of—from the reference to unidentified aircraft, we might think that he lives in a war zone. When we find out that it is against the rules for Pilots to fly over the community, we know that Jonas lives in a community that is different from our own, but we do not know at first how different it. The community must be very safe and peaceful indeed if the only time Jonas can remember being frightened is when an unidentified plane flew over his community. Some aspects of life in the community are startling, but they are easily explained. At the same time, it is a convenient public address system that was able to reassure many frightened people. We know that the society is extremely orderly and peaceful, and that everyone has a job that he or she enjoys and can do well. Jonas is not hoping for a desirable or prestigious position, just one that he will be able to do well. In general, the society seems to be an almost perfect model of a communist society, one in which everyone in the community works together for the common good and receives an equal share of the benefits of living in the community.

The Giver by Lois Lowry Just an 8th-grade teacher reading a fantastic book aloud. Why? I was tired of trying to find a decent audiobook online to use in the classroom, so I decided to make my own.

The elevens need to put in volunteer hours at many places so that the elders can find what job suits them best. Jonas thinks that another eleven-year-old named Benjamin puts in almost all of his hours at the Rehabilitation Center where he has helped improve the way that they assist people who have been injured. That will clearly be his future job, but Jonas wonders what his will be. He goes in and finds his friends bathing an old man. Jonas begins to assist an old woman take her bath. Fiona tells Jonas about a celebration they recently held to release Roberto. Jonas remembers Roberto, an old man he had met several weeks before. Fiona explains that at the celebration they summarize what he did with his life, make toasts, give speeches, and then Roberto is happily escorted away. Chapter five has the family sitting down the following morning and recounting their dreams. Recounting dreams begins at age three. He describes how he was in the House of the Old, and he was trying to convince Fiona to get into the tub. He wanted to bathe her. His mom takes him aside and tells him she will write him a letter of apology for being late to school, but she needs to tell him something. She explains that his dream is the first sign of a stirring. When stirrings begin, children must commence taking a pill every morning to stop them. Jonas somehow felt more grown up knowing he would take the pill each morning the rest of his life, the way his parents did, but he almost missed the pleasurable feeling of the stirring. In chapter six the ceremonies begin. They take two days, which everyone receives off as holidays. In the ceremony of one, Fiona went up with her family to receive her new brother, Bruno. One family received a boy named Caleb to replace their previous son Caleb who had drowned at the age of four. Child deaths were extremely rare in their society, so the community mourned the loss by whispering his name more and more softly throughout the day. Then at this ceremony, they said the name Caleb louder and louder to wipe away the memory of the one they had lost. Jonas sat through the various ceremonies anxiously awaiting his. The tens received adult haircuts, the elevens were given more mature undergarments. People almost never applied to leave because the community was so well-organized. The matching of spouses often took many months, and then the couple had to wait three years before applying for a child to make sure they were perfectly suited to one another. Even though he trusted the elders, Jonas had no idea what his future job might be.
