

Chapter 1 : I Hide Giants That I Make From Wood In The Wilderness Of Copenhagen | Bored Panda

Go on a treasure hunt to find The Six Forgotten Giants in the western municipalities of Copenhagen: RÅ, dovre, Hvidovre, VallensbÅ, ik, IshÅ, j, Albertslund and HÅ, je Taastrup.

February 11, by admin The World was completely covered in giants on every continent before and after modern man appeared on the scene. The Proof is everywhere, or was. On every continent, except South America, all remains were confiscated and vanished. In one case in America, 60 skeletons 10 to 12 feet tall were found in a cave by some farmers. Every single one vanished. And in their place were put fake artifacts and the heights were changed to between 6 and 8 feet, everywhere. For me it was different. I grew up in Nevada. We received much of the California broadcasting. There was no cable in those days. The movie we were watching had a giant in it. My grandmother commented that my great grandfather was a giant. I asked if she meant my grandpa with the one hand. I thought she meant him because he was six and a half feet tall. My mother reports that his ears were between six and seven inches from top to bottom. I was told how he had a horse that was six feet high at the back and he could be seen over the saddle from the shoulders up. From polite people who I could feel thought I was telling tall tales, Pun intended. This compelled me to do a lot of giant research in my teens. They told of red-haired men and women of light colored skin as tall as 12 feet who originally lived in the area when the Paiutes had first arrived. Evidently these human giants liked to eat the Indians so they had problems making friends. The Indian tribes of the area finally joined and ambushed the giants killing most of them on the spot. The remaining giants took refuge in a cave. The Indians demanded they come out and fight but the giants refused. So, the Indians piled brush into the cave and set it on fire. Any giants that did run out were shot with arrows, the remaining giants were asphyxiated. Lovelock cave is located around 20 miles South of Lovelock Nevada. After digging out four feet of guano they found many broken arrows that the Indians had fired into the cave as well as other interesting artifacts, and yes, they found red-haired giants. Even in the shrunken mummified condition the skeletons ranged in height from 8 feet to just under 12 feet. I did an internet search on this subject and found that the reported heights are very different from what I am stating here. My account is from what I was told growing up in Nevada. Most of the artifacts have been lost over time due to lack of interest from science. Both skeletons were wrapped in a gum treated fabric. The first skeleton was 8 and one half feet tall, the second was just under 10 feet tall. In prospectors outside of Eureka Nevada found a human leg broken off four inches above the knee cap including the foot. This leg was found sticking out of solid red quartzite rock dating from the time of the dinosaurs. After using their picks to extract their find from the rock they took it to Eureka. Medical doctors examined the bones and stated that it did indeed belong to a human of very modern appearance. The interesting part was the size of the bones. They measured from heel to knee 39 inches. The owner would have stood over 12 feet tall. The area was searched for more remains but nothing else was found. This story was heavily published in the newspapers of the time. Only a few years after I had first moved here I again heard about red-haired giants. Two giant 10 and 12 foot red-haired skeletons were found in a lava cave in a canyon behind Olowalu Hawaii. I drove out to Olowalu to see what I could find out. After making my way off the main road onto the old road. I turned up the canyon in which I had been told the research was happening. After a little exploring I found some excellent though strange petroglyphs on the side of a rock out cropping. I was just able to take a few pictures before a white SUV drove up with a man and a woman in it. The woman was driving. The woman told me that I would have to leave the area. After talking with her for a few minutes she admitted that Red-haired skeletons had been found and that they were much larger than they should be. She would not tell me any exact measurements. She did say that they did not want to upset the Hawaiians with their discoveries. The man never spoke even when I greeted him. It should be noted that although there is the spirit of Pele that is the Goddess of fire believed to live in the volcano. Pele started out as a physical Pele that traveled the islands. She is described as extremely tall with fiery red hair, fair skin, great strength, incredible beauty, voracious sexual appetite and a deadly temper. Pele traveled the islands of Hawaii digging underground tunnels in an effort to find a spot that she could dig deep caves that did not flood with water so she could make a safe home for her family. Several days after meeting the man and woman in the SUV, I went back at night. More than anything I wanted to see exactly where the discovery was. This time I took a sugar cane road in from another direction. I four wheeled it in so that I would be on the ridge above the canyon on top of the rock outcropping with the petroglyphs. I was not there very long before headlights came on below me and started working their way to me. I knew I could be gone before they could get to me but I figured I just as well go meet them. It turned out to be a local guy who was hired as security to guard the site. He told me that Yes, two giants were found. A man and a woman, the big one was easily 12 feet. He did not like staying all night in the canyon it gave him the willies. I kept him company for a while and he told me where the cave was. Not that it mattered they covered it completely when they were done. Even now the area where I had driven my truck on the ridge to look into the canyon is a housing development. Close but no cigar. So, it does not really count as proof of a race of giants. Giants in Peru Recently I took a trip to Peru and guess what jumped out at me in some of the museums I visited there? Yes, it was giants. In Peru they are not whisked away like they are in the USA. It should be noted that there have been hundreds of giant discoveries in the USA that have been either ignored or taken into custody by the Smithsonian never to be seen again. The Incas actually had kings that were giants and had red and blond hair. In the Gold Museum in Lima you can still see the clothing and head of an Incan king who stood an easy 10 feet tall. His golden robe is 8 feet long and did not touch the ground when he wore it. His gold gloves are twice as long as my hands. I have tried to keep this within the realm of my own experiences. There is so much more to this. Like the 64 pound sledge hammer found in a year old copper mine near the town of Llandudno in North Wales. Giant axes unearthed in Iran, Giant swords, etc. You could read for weeks on the subject of giants and if your mind is anything like mine enjoy every minute of it. I would suggest googeling Solomon Island giants, red haired giants, Arizona giants, California giants, Ohio giants, Peruvian giants. I could go on forever about giants but the fact is Science says that races of giant humans do not exist and never have. I sure wish they would stop leaving their stuff lying around. Yes, I know my grandmother should not have let a 5 year old watch creature features. Led by Brennus, their chieftain, they crossed over the Apennines and swarmed into northern Italy, ravaging Etruscan towns and the surrounding country as they went. While looting the Etruscans, Polybius says the Senones took a liking for their beautiful country and decided to occupy it themselves. So, on a small pretext, the Gallic giants suddenly attacked the Etruscans with a sizable army and expelled them from the plains of the Po. Perhaps still feeling the economic pinch of their recent war with the Etruscans, or possibly not realizing the gravity of the situation, the Roman Senate decided against military aid. Instead they voted to send three envoys to Clusium to mediate the dispute between the native Etruscans and the invading Celts. For its envoys, the Senate chose three noblemen, all of the well-known Fabian family. While on this assignment, however, one of these gentlemen, Quintus Fabius, committed an act that ignited a quarrel between the Senones and Rome itself. The Senones, bent upon punishing Rome for the offense, eventually brought that great city to its knees.

Chapter 2 : author, Ari Berk Giants

The hidden giants Under land and sea, in vast subterranean laboratories, scientists are working to uncover the secrets of the universe, from 'dark matter' to global warming.

In the last couple of decades, much of the population on Earth has firmly come to believe that history has been told only partially. Throughout the decades, countless findings have been made, pointing towards a much different history than we are being told by mainstream scholars. Religion, ancient texts, and monuments are only partially understood by scholars, who are ever-more selective when sharing their knowledge. One of the most interesting researchers who has come to challenge mainstream scholars and their extremely linear views on history and our origins is without a doubt Michael Tellinger. Tellinger is an author, scientist, and explorer, who has made a number of groundbreaking discoveries regarding ancient civilizations that mysteriously vanished under doubtful circumstances. In nearly all ancient cultures, there is evidence suggesting beings of humongous size, existed on our planet in the distant past. Physical evidence supporting such theories can also be found around the globe. One of such examples is a part of an upper leg bone of a being that is believed to have been at least 3. The bone was discovered in northern Namibia by miners and is considered as one of the most important and rare specimens of giant beings existing on our planet in the distant past. However, more similar discoveries were made around the globe. A centimeter-long figure found in Egypt is another impressive discovery that contradicts conventional historical views. Only a few people got to take images of this incredible artifact in In an interview with BILD. I was allowed to take it in hand and also to take pictures. A bill was put next to it to get a size comparison. The bent finger was split open and covered with dried mold. Interestingly, in , the Smithsonian Institute dispatched a team of researchers to the South Charleston Mount. There, according to reports, they discovered numerous giant skeletons ranging from 7 to 9 feet tall. The finding was omitted by researchers who remained silent and decided not to speak about the lost race of giants found in burial mounds near Lake Delavan in Wisconsin. The excavation site was overseen by the Beloit College and included over mounds. Among these bones may lay answers not even sought by these officials concerning the deep past. This statue caused a worldwide sensation and was exhibited in New York City to thousands of paying customers before it was declared a fake by the NY newspapers, despite the fact that scholars from Harvard and elsewhere insisted that the statue was genuine. In ancient Egypt for example, we have numerous hieroglyphs which depict beings that are up to five times larger than ordinary humans. In the valley of Khafre in Egypt, we find one of the most incredible ancient temples built using humongous limestone blocks, some as large as 30 feet long, while weighing over tons. This fact makes you wonder just how was it possible, for ancient mankind to erect such monuments, with the accuracy and precision they did, thousands of years ago. Graham Hancock explains it pretty well in his book Fingerprints of the Gods: At the very frontiers of construction technology, these are both vast, industrialized machines, with booms reaching more than feet into the air, which require on-board counterweights of tons to prevent them from tipping over. The preparation-time for a single lift is around six weeks and calls for the skills of specialized teams of up to 20 men.

Chapter 3 : Machu Picchu: The Hidden Giant Human Face - Hidden Inca Tours

*The Hidden Giants [Sethanne Howard] on www.nxgvision.com FREE shipping on qualifying offers. Over 4, years of women in science and technology! Women have contributed to the technical growth of civilization along with men since the beginning of written history.*

The residency has generated incredible conversations in the classrooms, the staff room and further afield. It has provoked my thinking and refined my approach. Through our work there are two key strands which I thought it would be worth sharing: The role of questions in the classroom Finding the hidden curriculum Questions in the classroom When I worked with the classes on Fridays I was amazed by the level of debate. The pupils have an amazing ability to make connections which leads them to new thought patterns. I have tried to demonstrate how learning can be woven through the curriculum rather than the curriculum fragmenting learning. Do you avoid it or do you accept the need to work within the unknown? How easy do you find it asking open ended questions to your class? When working with pupils I attempt to find the key question that allows them to see different avenues of thinking. It should challenge and disrupt. My questions often start with: Have you thought about. Can you tell me more about. A teacher in a different school had taken a box containing an unknown stimulus for learning from a CPD session and carried it around for two days. When she opened it with the class they discovered 3 paint brushes for walls. One of the pupils suggested they paint the walls which got everyone excited. I suggested an alternative approach may have involved asking questions to help them better understand why they wanted to paint the walls: Little minds make the best connections. This is all about finding the right questions that take the pupils into uncharted territory which they thrive and surprise us in. When I worked with the pupils the sessions were fast paced which allowed us to cover a lot of topics. As I facilitated I made connections to the different curricular areas and spotted potential learning intentions. This also happened during the box experiment when I spoke with the pupils. They seemed completely immersed in their learning which allowed them to stray into a variety of areas. Due to a lack of space we had to work outside. We agreed the boys would be given the instructions: The teacher was great she adopted the role of chief safety officer which allowed her to step in if needed but left everything else to the pupils. After their raft building lesson at the local burn they walked back to the school proud of their achievement. The prototype allowed them to see what was missing. The skills the boys began to identify and develop could never be taught – they have to be discovered.

Chapter 4 : Rome Blog: EXPLORING THE HIDDEN GIANTS OF ANCIENT ROME

Hidden Giants is an education consultancy agency that collaborates with teachers, practitioners and policy makers. We support schools to re-imagine their curriculum by placing disruptive, creative and critical thinking at its heart.

Chapter 5 : The hidden origins on mankind: Giant Skeletons that will change History | Ancient Code

The latest Tweets from Hidden Giants (@biggorman). Experiments in learning; and adventures into the unknown unknowns. Curious about why we do what we do. Glasgow, Scotland.

Chapter 6 : Land of the Giants - at www.nxgvision.com

Giants, those huge humanoid creatures that are often mentioned in the literature, in the movies, in the myths In some cases they are described as powerful gods while in other cases as some huge bad person that endangers someone's life, but also there are some gentle giants.

Chapter 7 : Gartner ThinkCast: The Hidden DNA of Four Tech Giants

DOWNLOAD PDF THE HIDDEN GIANTS

Hidden Giants has worked in partnership with Dunning primary in Perth & Kinross since January The residency has generated incredible conversations in the classrooms, the staff room and further afield.

Chapter 8 : Thursday, October 4, - Hidden Giants - %

Franciscans cover the earth and continue to bring the vision of Francis to millions of people. Francis was a "hidden giant." His work has endured the test of time, and he is honored by Christians and non-Christians alike. Today we continue to read about another "hidden giant," Job.

Chapter 9 : The Hidden Curriculum | Hidden Giants

I said I was going to upload this a few days ago, sorry if you were actually waiting for it! The last like 3mins has just one pic, but it is very cool and re.