Tweet When we look closely at a beautiful quilt we realize that the individual patches are usually made from various materials and are from many different sources; such as hand-me-down clothing, baby jumpers, and hand stitched pieces made by grandma. They also represent the willingness to increase understanding and awareness of Self and of others. In context of the Quilt Concept, self-esteem is made of countless components like skills, knowledge, feelings, and attitudes. Ask yourself how you could find out what kind of Self-Esteem Quilt your students possess. Can we, by creating such a quilt, prevent horrific acts of violence in schools and homes? I deeply believe that every teacher can accomplish this seemingly impossible task. My aim here is to provide teachers with the tools to create, teach, and implement the components for such a quilt. The mere process of it increases step-by-step, or patch-by-patch? At the same time, it reduces low self-esteem actions and their impact on school participation. The Quilt Concept uses innovative class projects, interactive games, and motivation for instant success in the classroom. This allows you, the teacher, to focus far more on educating your students about the wonders of the world, and- it creates harmony in your classroom. My experience has shown that alone by using the Quilt Concept as a self-esteem instrument I had spent much less time on correcting negative behavior. In daily social behavioral patterns and interactions we recognize name-calling as a small individual step to wider prejudice; however, it is no small step from there to actual hate crimes or to ethnic harassment, or to bringing guns to school or insulting an entire race, ethnic group or people. Keeping silent is one of the most wide-spread forms of prejudice in our society! Teach your students to become individualized thinkers and speakers. Teaching and learning ethical values and tolerance awareness must be a conscious, continued effort by teachers and parents. Therefore, we, the teachers, are so challenged; it is important to have help and the self-esteem worksheets and lesson integration will assist in teaching, practicing, accepting and learning to implement the various patches. And we know that intolerance and the lack of self-esteem is a learned behavior. Colleagues, spread the Quilt in your classroom! In an additional thought I like to point to a Quilt Concept segment for our younger students. It will guide kids to stronger self-assurance, encourages them to believe in themselves, and helps to overcome fear. Remember that each patch of this Self-Esteem Quilt represents an emotional competency, a social and behavioral skill, and the knowledge of preventing the build-up of harmful emotions. Moreover, in concert with respect, understanding, caring and considerations, the meaning and the implementation of the Quilt Concept becomes a life style. Use your red thread of love to sew the patches into an awe-inspiring Self-Esteem Quilt! After an earlier successful career in the performing arts, Anke obtained a degree in Journalism; disillusioned about journalistic truth, she turned her passion to teaching which provided her with the opportunity to share her vast knowledge.
