Tom and Jerry are pursuing each other in a zoo. During the chase, Tom accidentally destroys the painting of an art-loving monkey. This leads to the monkey becoming quite angry, but his temper cools after he makes Tom look like a tiger by dipping him in orange paint and adding black stripes on with his paintbrush. All of the other characters in the episode, save for the monkey himself, see Tom and develop the concept that he is a real tiger. Tom is working at a zoo run by Spike, who tells Tom not to feed the zoo animals or he will be fired from his job. Jerry then starts to frame Tom for feeding them so he will get into trouble. Tom and Butch plot ways to catch Jerry and eat him. Nevertheless, Jerry has earned the friendship of a large polar bear, who will do anything to protect his friend. These episodes are preceded by The Karate Guard. After another chase, Tom and Jerry accidentally go through valet clothing and stop in front of a hotel after making a limousine stop by. Spike hands Tom his keys and tells him and Jerry to park their car under one condition: Unfortunately, Tom presses it. Toodles Galore made a cameo appearance in this episode. Cat Got Your Luggage?: Tom chases Jerry yet again and they both end up in a large fancy hotel lobby. The dog angrily raises his voice at Tom, who now is begging at his feet to show mercy. Jerry decides that this is the perfect opportunity to get Tom into trouble. Tom chases Jerry all the way to a garbage dump, which happens to be the current home of Butch the cat. Both cats fight over the mouse, and in the end, Jerry outsmarts both of them. In an effort for food, Tom runs to a man selling hot dogs, but accidentally steps on a slip of paper that he kicks off and the man finds. Happily, the hotdog man finds out the paper was a winning lottery ticket and gives Tom his job because of his newly-won money. The cat finds that there is only one hotdog left that he takes out to eat, but Spike pulls it right before Tom is able to take one bite, and flips him a quarter. Spike and Tom then see Jerry who is playing the bongos, which gives him a lot of money. In anger and jealousy, Tom plays instruments as well, causing Jerry to lose all of his money, which gets sent to Tom. This makes both characters play music to get the others money. Jerry is relaxing by playing the music until lots of noises are heard. Jerry returns and plays the radio. Meanwhile, the chicken proceeds eggs while music is on. Then, Tom was tired by lots of eggs and runs away in a safe place. Tom and Jerry are resting at home, when at 1: Tom chases Jerry in the graveyard and into a Southern manor. With the help of a bat that looks like him, Jerry scares Tom. Jerry lives in a dusty haunted mansion in this episode. Tom moves in and cleans everything up, not noticing Jerry lives in his new estate as well. Tom turns his TV on and switches the channel to one that has a flaming skull currently on-screen. Jerry turns his head and finds a skull that looks remarkably like it, so he decides to scare Tom out his house. Eventually, they both get scared by a ghost-like figure living in the mansion. Tomb It May Concern: This angers the mummy inside, who chases the two. Then the tomb breaks into pieces after they open a brick and Jerry is congratulated for excavating the lost treasure. Tom and Jerry are the victims of a shipwreck and are washed up on a deserted island where they both find dinosaur eggs from which hatchlings grow pretty quickly into adults. Tom and Jerry relax on Hawaii which is home to an active volcano. The Goddess of Flame soon chases the two out of the volcano and near a cliff, and Tom and Jerry are about to fall into the river, but Jerry saves himself and Tom by scaring her. Tom returns from a garbage dump with things he found at the dump. He uses these things to make a computer and uses Jerry as the mouse. While making the computer, Tom breaks a part of the roof to make the computer taller and at the top of the computer there is a clothes hanger. The clothes hanger is struck by lightning. This causes the two to enter the digital world. Tom and Jerry soon meet their own digital versions, which look exactly like them and the two also discover that whenever the two touch their digital holograms versions more holograms are created. Tom and Jerry soon have an adventure with their digital versions. Tom and Jerry live in the house of a young boy. However, Tom does not realize the side effect: Jerry falling in love with her. Tom, Jerry, and Spike are chasing each other in a neighborhood, tearing everything in their path apart. A mysterious truck passes by outside on the street, hitting a bump and dropping a wrapped package out the back. It appears to be an ordinary and somewhat silly-looking vest, and

Spike encourages Tom to put it on. When he does, he is surprised when it turns into a Rocketeer -esque flying suit. Tom has fun flying about, doing things like skywriting rude caricatures of Spike and Jerry, teasing a bird nesting on the roof, and crashing a barbecue Droopy makes a cameo appearance here as the barbecuer. After Jerry and Spike get fed up with his tricks, they scheme to take the airborne airhead down. In a castle surrounded by water, Jerry is seen holding a stack of cheese on a saucer, escaping from Tom dressed in knight armor who is mercilessly attempting to eliminate Jerry with a mace. Tom, tries to scour the castle to see where Jerry has hidden. Keeping his stance next to a replica of a knight, holding an axe, Jerry takes a tiny peek through the helmet. He then, back down when Tom finally discovers where Jerry was. With that, Tom pounds the living daylight out the deceived replica. Luckily, Jerry cowered underneath the shoes, makes his escape and ducks into a hole. Then, the king gives Tom a job: However, when Tom arrives, Jerry has awakened the dragon. It swallows Tom, but he manages to steal the fire from the dragon. Tom scares the dragon out of the cave, and chases Jerry and swallows him. But later, Jerry steals the fire from Tom and returns it to the dragon, who then chases the cat. Tom chases Jerry through the woods and towards a castle. Tom ends up in the bedroom of a spoiled little princess, engaging in a tea party with her toys while reading a fairy tale story to them. When he turns back into a mangy old cat, the girl becomes enraged, forcing Tom to dash back out of the castle into a moat, which is the home of a huge alligator. After a few tense seconds, Tom suddenly lets out a deafening scream. The alligator then chases Tom offscreen. Tom is a crooked tax collector who finagles the poor mice of a village out of every coin they have, even Jerry. A band of Beatle -esque rats sets up at the outskirts of town and performs a rock song called " The Itch ": Dig into the dirt. The song is about to play until Jerry tries to play flute with the band, but is booted unceremoniously offstage. When the song starts, all the mice dance in a weird way. Jerry then realizes why the audience is dancingâ€”the music is controlling swarms of fleas , making them move with frantic scratching. With some help from Tom and the band, Jerry convinces the villagers to leap off a nearby bluff into the lake, washing the flea pests off. Later, the grateful band rocks on to an appreciative and flealess crowd. Jerry is the featured flautist, and Tom is the ticket taker. Two-Shoes goes to bed on Christmas Eve, Tom lies in his basket and dreams of chasing after Jerry and eating him. Jerry, not liking this, enters the dream and turns it into a nightmare. Two-Shoes, woken by the ruckus, is not happy. She tosses the pair into the cold. The narrator suggests that this is the time of year where enemies put aside their differencesâ€”though Jerry seems to have other ideas. The two continue chasing each other through the snow. Tom and Jerry are chasing one another in the snow. Spike is sledding down a nearby hill, and accidentally crashes into them. He then does this repeatedly, thinking it is funny. He bullies the two relentlessly as he guffaws at their pain. Tom and Jerry soon get Spike back, but all three wind up with broken arms and legs. To show them no hard feelings, Spike gives the boys a Christmas present: But they chuck it into the fireplace. Northern Light Fish Fight: In the Arctic wastes, Tom is a fisherman with nothing to show for it but a bunch of holes in the ice and a very cold worm.

First time actually using the EZPass and it was so slick. We just kept rolling at 65 mph through the toll. Susan and Bill got really interested in it after seeing all the benefits and the only cost is the hassle of getting it. We arrived in Salem by 10 am, with John managing to find a spot to park on the street. We confirmed with a passer by that our spot was good all day. It was not far from the House of the Seven Gables. We had a bit of walking to find our primary destination, the Salem Witch Museum, but that just means more good exercise! Nearby was the Pickering wharf. We arrived at the Witch Museum just in time to get tickets and get in to the show. Here they shared the story of how it all came about in a kind of diorama in the dark, parts exposed as the story progressed. If they admitted guilt they were simply jailed and forgotten. While jailed their families were responsible for the cost of jailing " food, chains" The statue is of Roger Conant The first settler of Salem in There is also the Witch House. Since it had a fee we all figured it was okay to just enjoy the outside. The Visitor Center, which is also a National Park. Then it was time for lunch so we decided on Kushco Bistro, recommended by my phone app Urban Spoon. We were all stuffed after just the first half but we were all able to work our way to the end, they were so tasty. Now we could explore Salem. Here are some buildings that caught my eye: Richard More, also buried in this graveyard. Note also after that the Five Cents Savings Bank. Near the graveyard is the Witch Trials Memorial to those hanged one was pressed to death as witches. Quotes of the last words of these brave innocents are printed into the concrete under our feet. Some Salem scenes, including the red line you can follow to see the Salem sites. The last is Salem Commons. Such a lovely park right next to all the action. Notice I got to spin the wool on a year old spinner to make a bracelet. Susan got caught in the stocks along with John and I. She was much happier about the ordeal! We were tired, footsore and still had a trip to Costco yet. Thanks to our GPS we found Costco, did our shopping quickly while Bill and Susan got something to drink, then headed back home.

Share1 Shares K Witches and witchcraft have captivated the minds of everyone: Witches have been seen as objects of wisdom and evil in folklore for many generations. She is the female equivalent and wife to the domovoi, or male household spirit, and her presence is always made known by wet footprints. She took up a rather peculiar hobby—she would turn passing sailors into wolves and lions and all sorts of animals after drugging them. Hey, some people collect stamps, others like turning men into animals. Who are we to judge? When Odysseus visited Aeaea, Circe turned his men into swine, but Odysseus was given a magical plant by the gods that prevented Circe from morphing him. In the myths, she works tirelessly with her magic to bring down the good Queen Guinevere, who banished her from the court when she was younger. The ultimate fate of Morgan is unknown, but she does eventually reconcile with King Arthur and brings him to Avalon after his final battle. As the story goes, King Saul went to the Witch of Endor for answers about how to defeat the Philistines. Saul, who is wounded the next day in the battle, kills himself out of fear. Jenny Greenteeth was a hag who would intentionally drown the young and the old for the sheer fun of it. In some legends, she devours the children and elderly. But the main moral to this story is this: The Chedipe is a woman has died during childbirth or committed suicide and is to the Indian equivalent of the succubus. She rides on a tiger in the moonlight, and when she enters a home, not a soul will wake or notice her. She then sucks the life out of each man through the toes—yes, the toes—and leaves without a trace. But the very first characters in the story are the ones that set everything in motion—the Weird Sisters. They act as agents of destruction and not only send Macbeth into a spiral of corruption and paranoia, they send all of Scotland to war just to take one man out of power. The Bell Witch would attack members of the household and frequently swear at the family, and she eventually poisoned John Bell, Sr. Remind us to burn some sage tonight. She was also the goddess of witches, sorcery, poisonous plants, and a host of other witchy attributes. Hecate was the daughter of the titan Perses, and she is still worshipped by some Greek polytheists today. It is said that the very concept of a jinx came from her, and shrines to her were raised to prevent the wrath of evil demons and spirits in the Greek mythos. Why the very spinners of fate, of course. The Graeae, on the other hand, were three malevolent sisters—kin to the Gorgons Medusa and her two lesser-known sisters. The Graeae were not the friendliest bunch, but they did share an eye, which they passed between themselves. The Graeae also had knowledge of the unknown and of fate, but they did not control it. So which is worse—sisters to Medusa or those who could snip your string of life? Vlad Vekshtein is an eccentric writer and sci-fi geek who enjoys mythology as well.
