

Chapter 1 : Eye on Romance | Bringing you everything Romance | Historical Romance -Townhouse for Tessa

Tessa heads to London with the knowledge and that on her 21st birthday, which is just days away, she will learn the truth about her past. She never expects that she is the daughter of a countess or to fall for the charms of handsome Harry Fallbrook.

John is a true scholar, and his posts are always extremely well-researched, informative, and intriguing. The 7,500-square-foot Georgian townhouse was originally built in for Anne Vanderbilt by architect Mott Schmidt. It most recently belonged to Drue Heinz who died in March. John has permitted me to republish his work today, and it is fascinating to compare the real estate images with an Architectural Digest feature from the 1980s. Today far too many people have come to think of a house as a sort of casa di moda – the kind of fashionable house that has to be done over every two or three years. Once you can make the house right, once it fits as snugly as a glove, then it is the way it should stay. Forever, in my opinion. Because it is on the corner, it has windows on three sides and its entrance on the long side of the building, which makes it look much larger than it really is. On top of that, it has the good fortune not only to have river views, but to have access to the beautiful shared lawn of Sutton Square. We will see the photos from when it was photographed by Horst and appeared in Architectural Digest. The listing photos are lovely but most of the art, especially, is gone. Heinz had not visited this house in at least a decade, although it was continuously staffed. This photo is from Google images and shows the whole house from the street. This photo is from Mott B. We are looking diagonally toward Sutton Place here. According to the caption: According to the article: In some ways it was a lovely stage set, already partially completed: The richness of the material is awesome: In addition, the period furniture and accessories arranged by Signor Mongiardino form quite a generous cornucopia. The furnishings encompass a wide range of many periods and styles: Surely it does not seem unreasonable for European interior designers to deal with material that is basically European. Being an Italian, Lorenzo Mongiardino is far from inarticulate about his role. I have the highest respect for the great decorators. The photo above is a cropped version of the A. Many of the elements are still in place and it is still very beautiful. Dark 18th-century English pine paneling is brightened by floral curtains and upholstery, and an Aubusson rug. For many years now I have been working on old houses, with a great deal of pleasure. Really they have become my main interest, and practically all my work lies in the area of restoration. I want to bring these wonderful old houses back to life – to turn them into places where people can live comfortably today. Photo by Horst, from Architectural Digest.
