Top of Page Behavior and Communication Approaches According to reports by the American Academy of Pediatrics and the National Research Council, behavior and communication approaches that help children with ASD are those that provide structure, direction, and organization for the child in addition to family participation. ABA has become widely accepted among health care professionals and used in many schools and treatment clinics. ABA encourages positive behaviors and discourages negative behaviors in order to improve a variety of skills. There are different types of ABA. Following are some examples: Lessons are broken down into their simplest parts and positive reinforcement is used to reward correct answers and behaviors. Incorrect answers are ignored. Positive changes in these behaviors should have widespread effects on other behaviors. Other therapies that can be part of a complete treatment program for a child with an ASD include: It also focuses on how the child deals with sights, sounds, and smells. For example, picture cards can help teach a child how to get dressed by breaking information down into small steps. Occupational Therapy Occupational therapy teaches skills that help the person live as independently as possible. Skills might include dressing, eating, bathing, and relating to people. Sensory Integration Therapy Sensory integration therapy helps the person deal with sensory information, like sights, sounds, and smells. Sensory integration therapy could help a child who is bothered by certain sounds or does not like to be touched. Some people are able to learn verbal communication skills. For others, using gestures or picture boards is more realistic. The person is taught to use picture symbols to ask and answer questions and have a conversation. Visit the Autism Speaks or Autism Society website to read more about these therapies. Dietary Approaches Some dietary treatments have been developed by reliable therapists. But many of these treatments do not have the scientific support needed for widespread recommendation. An unproven treatment might help one child, but may not help another. Many biomedical interventions call for changes in diet. Dietary treatments are based on the idea that food allergies or lack of vitamins and minerals cause symptoms of ASD. Some parents feel that dietary changes make a difference in how their child acts or feels. Or talk with a nutritionist to be sure your child is getting important vitamins and minerals. But there are medications that can help some people with related symptoms. For example, medication might help manage high energy levels, inability to focus, depression, or seizures. Top of Page Complementary and Alternative Treatments To relieve the symptoms of ASD, some parents and health care professionals use treatments that are outside of what is typically recommended by the pediatrician. These types of treatments are known as complementary and alternative treatments CAM. They might include special diets, chelation a treatment to remove heavy metals like lead from the body , biologicals e. The National Institute of Dental and Craniofacial Research has a website to help health professionals with the oral health care needs of patients with an ASD. Gov lists federally funded clinical trials that are looking for participants. ATN is also developing a shared national medical database to record the results of treatments and studies at any of their five established regional treatment centers.
