Survival is about more than water. Today features a few great articles that make that distinction. However, that estimate is only for customers who are affected by system outages. If the power drop into your home has been affected by the storm, you will need to wait longer as you are most likely on the bottom of the priority pile. They have already restored power to some 21, customers, but that was the high priority customers and the low hanging fruit easy to repair. Of course, some will remember just a few years ago when the government decided to excuse the power companies poor management of their power lines. The same conditions created some nasty wildfires, but the power companies were not help responsible. A hat tip to G. More than Water A SurvivalBlog reader sent in this article on how prepping is more than just buying a few cases of bottled water. Many families think that they can just run to Walmart, grab a couple of cases of water and be set for whatever life throws their way. No, prepping is a way of life. While the video is produced by an Australian organization, they cover issues ranging all over the world. Even the comments, which I generally avoid on YouTube, are worth reading on this subject. The film is about 35 minutes long. As Robb mentions in the review, this was the original YouTube resource. It even has a recipe for making your own dynamite. You can download an online copy of the edition for free at the Gutenberg. Kicking the Can Sears is a prime example that you can only kick the can down the road for so long before the consequences catch up to you. Of course, the real fix would have been to continue to deliver products and services to customers in a way that was convenient for them. Sears missed the boat on that one. I recently bought a Craftsman tool chest from their online store. It was a closeout model and I got a good price on it. There were two things about this sale that really chapped my hide though. One was how many calls I got from the company about the delivery. All told, between the purchase and delivery of the product, I received no less than 14 calls about how they expected me to be at home when they delivered it. It turns out that there were so many conditions placed on spending those bonus dollars that it took nearly 2 hours of phone calls for me to just walk away from them. Nope, they are still not delivering what customers want. Catering to Mass Exodus Reader H. The brokerage finds out where you want to move to and partners you up with a real estate specialist for the area that you want to move to while helping them sell their homes. One of their scientists gone rogue detonates a device called the Gene Bomb. This causes all of the metahumans to go crazy, attacking their nervous systems and making their powers completely uncontrollable. This very quickly leads to a world-wide panic, as the havoc wreaked by the superheroes threatens to destroy the planet they fought so hard to save. Gene Bomb Captain Atom and Major Force begin unleashing nuclear energy in Manhattan, bordering on a complete meltdown. The Power Elite begin writhing in pain. Firestorm loses control of the primal energies he contains, and the Rocket Red Brigade can barely handle him and Soyuz. Maxwell Lord is forced to accept the help of Lex Luthor in putting together a massive impromptu mediplex for all of the self-destructing metahumans. Mediplex Doctor Megala and General Eiling discuss how best to deal with this new crisis. Although the President has ordered that the military be brought in to put the heroes down, the General feels that this is wrong. Non-affected capes across the world gather at the embassies to more effectively deal with the threat. Green Lanterns neutralize Captain Atom. Kilowog leads a task force against the New Guardians. Belle Reve, the supervillain prison, is completely overrun by its own inmates, and the Suicide Squad has to put down a riot from within. Manhunter has to take down the Flash singlehandedly. The Spectre fights Doctor Fate. Batman is called in to deal with Major Force. Martian Manhunter handles the Doom Patrol. Across the country, as stress levels run higher and the action heats up the media has difficulty providing coverage of the event. Criminals and supervillains take advantage of the power vacuum to rob and loot as much as they are able to, creating a nation-wide riot. Interestingly, Metamorpho, deceased at the time, was resurrected by the gene bomb. Having recently escaped from Starlag, the Omega Men and the Blasters are rocketing back towards Earth. Tigorr wants a piece of the action. He bickers with Snapper Carr, who seems to have become the leader of his group. At the Mediplex, all patients are gathered and treated with medical care, heroes and villains alike. The number of victims is absurdly large, and increasing by the minute. Scott Fischer succumbs to complications from his cancer. Top scientists are working around the clock to find a solution, but there is no end in sight. Their only hope is to find the creator of the virus and take the antidote from him. They are to perform a covert operation, ascertain the whereabouts of the alien scientists responsible for the bombings, and come home with an answer. Along the way, they pick up help from the Blasters and the Omega Men. The ship remains cloaked, but they are in danger of being caught by the Dominators at any time. Martian Manhunter and Robotman are teleported down in disguise by Snapper Carr. On the planet, they discover that the scientist responsible for the Gene Bomb is considered a renegade, and is being imprisoned for disobeying the higher caste. They believe he has destroyed the metas forever, making them useless to further exploitation and experimentation. Sneaking into the holding cell where the scientist is being tortured, Martian Manhunter simply steals the secrets of the antidote from his mind. He is able to bypass security by shapeshifting into a higher caste member and anticipating responses using telepathy. They are not so lucky in escaping. As soon as the ship begins to leave, they are spotted, and retaliatory spacecrafts are sent out to destroy them. These are thwarted by the heroes onboard. A Dominator laboratory is needed, and the only available one is on Starlag, right where everybody recently broke out of. It is still heavily guarded by the Citadel warriors, and the team must fight their way through swarms of them to get through. Now that the heavy hitters are in charge, crowds of Citadellians go down in the battle. They finish, racing against the clock, and leave as they see Khunds approaching in warships. As the heroes blast away, the Khunds obliterate the Starlag with their weaponry. Knowing that he will have to give the press release telling everyone the government failed, Eiling is getting himself drunk. In space, the returning heroes arrive just in time. In the same manner the virus was distributed, they spread the antidote through the atmosphere. Superman ignites it like a bomb and lets it rain down over the planet. As Eiling is grimly delivering the news to the media, word of the cure reaches him, and he smiles before dismissing everyone hurriedly. The next day, Perry White is proud to publish a new edition of the Daily Planet, with a headline that everyone can rejoice to. The papers read

Rebirth! Notes This issue takes place immediately after the Invasion! Aftermath crossovers, most of which ended with the detonation of the Gene Bomb. It is the conclusion of the whole series. This issue is reprinted in the Invasion! Trivia Metamorpho is resurrected in this issue. He perished back in Outsiders 27 during the Millennium event. It is established that Outlaw was another of the villains brought into the mediplex after the Gene Bomb attack in Manhunter

* , Bonnie G. Smith (editor), The Oxford Encyclopedia of Women in World History III: "Kafka-Service Sector, "Pederasty": Contemporary pederasty and korephilia differ from classical norms in that the younger partner may take sexual initiative rather than be passive in serving the pleasures of the older partner.

Entertainment, Sports, Marketing In the s, Amos Kendall, a Kentucky newspaper editor, became in the legend of public relations history essentially the first presidential press secretary, though with much more power and influence that is associated with that position. Kendall was able to help Jackson play to populist elements and overcome his most controversial issue, his brutal and life-long campaign of ethnic cleansing against Native Americans and his aggressive enforcement of Indian removal. Many of these messages were exaggerated, such as the legend of Daniel Boone, so important to the settlement of Kentucky, and later the stories of Buffalo Bill Cody, Wyatt Earp and Calamity Jane that induced settlers to the territories west of the Mississippi. Social reform in the second half of the 19th century also relied heavily on classic public relations techniques. The abolitionist movement also used the strategy of social activism, such as Harriet Tubman left who lead midnight escapes of slaves and then spoke about it in the North. The movement also involved other strategies: It employed tactics such as publications, public speaking, rallies and so on. The temperance movement to abolish liquor and the suffrage movement to gain women the right to vote were other successful social reform movements that employed similar public relations strategies and tactics. The Bryan-McKinley presidential campaign of was the first to mount an all-out effort of public opinion. It used posters, pamphlets and news releases; it used public meetings and speeches at whistle-stop train visits throughout the country. Government, Nonprofit organizations, Business organizations The public information era of public relations saw the founding of many public relations departments and agencies whose purpose was to provide the public with accurate, timely, honest, and favorable information about an organization or client. A pivotal figure in this era was Ivy Ledbetter Lee, known as the first public relations practitioner and often called the "father of public relations. During this period, the following "firsts" were observed: First public relations agency Boston University of Pennsylvania publicity bureau YMCA publicity bureau Standard Oil hires publicist Marine Corps publicity bureau Ford employee newsletter American Red Cross publicity program Creel Committee on Public Information National Lutheran Council press office Knights of Columbus press office Much of the communication research was related to the war-time interest in propaganda, brainwashing and social manipulation. In the post-war era, many researchers and practitioners continued to explore their interests in persuasive communication. This era is associated with a second founding figure, Edward Bernays. The nephew of Sigmund Freud, Bernays gave public relations a base in social psychology as he applied the new profession of public relations to national and international clients. Following are some of the highlights associated with this era: Walter Lippman wrote Public Opinion Bernays taught the first college class in public relations New York University Bernays wrote Crystallizing Public Opinion Government also was using public relations techniques. This committee was active during the First World War. The Voice of America radio system was established. Meanwhile, the Advocacy Era saw the development of many public relations agencies and departments. Among the better known historical figures are agency founders Bernays and his wife Doris Fleischman, Carl Byoir, Leona Baxter and Clem Whitaker political public relations , and Henry Rogers entertainment public relations. The advocacy model continues to be used in many situations. Most public relations agencies provide advocacy services for their clients, particularly those with products or services in competitive environments. The advocacy model is prevalent in political public relations, as well as in cause-related promotions of many types, from promoting citizen support for military campaigns to generating public support for health, safety, welfare, and other public issues. Regulated business, government, nonprofit organizations, social movements The latter part of the 20th Century and the beginning of the 21st has spawned a new approach to public relations, which complements the earlier three approaches of publicity, public information and advocacy. This new relationship model is built on the principles of communication as listening and on conflict resolution and the search for mutual benefits for both organizations and their publics.

In the business world, public-private partnerships and the courting of consumers are becoming common. In the religious world, the ecumenical movement and interreligious dialogue are examples of the relationship model. In all of these situations, public relations is becoming research-based and more a function of the management and leadership of an organization, rather than simply the implementation of communication tactics. Meanwhile, new technologies associated with the Internet allow organizations to communicate directly with their publics. These technologies, combined with the fragmentation of the so-called mass media, are creating new opportunities for public relations practitioners. Contemporary Trends in Public Relations At the beginning of the 21st Century, public relations is evolving in several ways:

Another local icon has been gobbled up by the modern world. Big box stores and on-line shopping have finally done in the Baytown Sears store, which first came here in the 's. Housed on the hill across from Lee College back then, it was the destination to buy appliances, lawn mowers, clothes.

House in a box: For 32 years just prior to World War II, Sears designed housing styles with customers choosing an architectural style that fit their budgets, according to the online Sears archives. One of those homes, in Davenport, is being marked for demolition. It was a nice, wood-framed house. The Hunters moved with their four children to Davenport from Gainesville in and moved into their Sears home the following year. Joyce Hunter added she and her husband have over the years worked to preserve as much original architectural and structural integrity as possible. It was a model home. They just sent you the instructions and you put them together. At least five surviving Sears Modern Homes not only exist in Avon Park but are still occupied and being preserved for their architectural contributions. Because the homes were delivered by railway car, many of the homes are situated close to a railway line. The president of the Davenport Historical Society, Rust said Davenport is a National Historic Landmark District, with structures of historic significance, mostly downtown. Rust, a Davenport native, said with no historic preservation ordinance in place, that home site is scheduled to be razed to make way for an enclave of townhomes. Rust said the home sustained fire damage in and has been vacant since. She said its previous owner had plans for restoration, but it never occurred. He said the site went through a preliminary plat with city commission because of its condition. Other construction factors that make Sears homes unusual were the use of balloon style framing, drywall, and asphalt shingles greatly eased construction for homebuyers, according to the Archives. Balloon framing utilizes long continuous framing studs that run from the sill to the top of the frame, with intermediate floor structures led into and nailed to them. Some of those attributes can be found in another Polk County Sears home at E. The Sessoms Avenue home is an example of the Sears home "airplane" bungalow style, which extends the horizontal plane of the building with shallow, intersecting roofs. Buchanan, a Lake Wales Realtor, moved into the home in and inherited the home from her parents, who bought it in Paul Catala can be reached at paul. To appreciate the rise and fall of Sears, the retail giant that filed for bankruptcy on Monday, consider a 19th-century pocket watch. To most modern shoppers, a pocket watch is boring.
