Add Comments Unlike the other cities in U. S, Idaho has an unique charm that makes it an outstanding experience for anyone who loves nature. So, if the historical explorations or the long hours of night parties are getting monotonous, get a ticket to this state to check out the must see Idaho sightseeings. When you talk about the tourist spots in Idaho, it is hands down the mountains, the lakes and the enchanting verdures. Home to the great Star Garnets, the state boasts of unmatched scenic beauty and uninterrupted solitude, making it a perfect destination for honeymoon couples and the oldies. Amble around the quaint pathways of the forests and picnic beside the lake to make your travel memorable. Other than just scenic beauty and the must see places in Idaho, the state is distinctively famous for gems as well. At Idaho, you can practically find all types of Gems. Name it and the Idahoans will get it for you. While the entire state is like a paradise surrounded by verdant forests, pellucid lakes, meandering rivers and beauteous hills, there is still place for you to take a break at the city pubs or the restaurants. For tourists, it is obviously better to start with the must see places in Idaho, rather than vagabonding the entire state aimlessly. Before you jump into the dense wilderness or hike the mountains, find some time to visit the Idaho University at Moscow town and tour the university campus on weekday hours. Traversing though the capital city, Boise, you can come across breathtaking sceneries that will grasp your heart. Get romantic with nature at the shores of the Boise River or enjoy canoeing, kayaking, rafting or picnicking. Take a break from the capital and traverse into the deeper laid back areas of the state. In this context, the Tautphaus Park Zoo and the Idaho Falls are world famous sites where you can enjoy the cool breezy atmosphere and the picturesque surrounding. While the former is the perfect getaway for the wildlife lovers, the later is mostly renowned for its subtle natural grandiose. Whereas, for those who are looking for some silence, can instantly find solace at the Idaho Fall site. Two of the other must see places in Idaho, the Shoshone Falls and the Sun Valley are also marvelous places to stopover and enjoy the pleasant atmosphere. The serenity around the Shoshone Falls is undoubtedly a natural gift for the picnic lovers. Whereas, the Sun Valley is game for Skiing and adoring nature. If you are still left with time and energy, use the opportunity to visit the Bruneau Dunes State Park and the Lake Lowell to further admire the art of nature. The enormous sand dune at the Bruneau Dunes State Park that rises up to a height of feet, the surrounding prairie land that stretches until it vanishes at the horizon, the unconventional beauty of the desert wastelands and the sprawling marshes, make the place amazing to be captured in your camera. Further, the Lake Lowell, a must see place in Idaho, is yet another natural wonder, spread out with lushly pastures around the crystal clear water of the lake. Finally, before, you leave take a shot at the tongue tingling delicacies at some of the best restaurants in the cities. List of must see Idaho sightseeings:

Needless to say that for someone like me who spends most of her time cooking, and who loves to cook, Japan is the place to go. Everything is perfection, to the quality of the products, to the gorgeous presentations, to the meticulous creations, Japanese strive for perfection and they do it better than any other country. Everything is an art, and people take pride in whatever they do. Many countries should take example on Japan. Since I took pictures and notes on everything I ate, in order not to forget it, I have the goal to reproduce most of the delightful dishes I ate to the best of my abilities. So within the next month or two, the dishes will be Japan-inspired. It all depends of the cut of the ingredients the types of knives they have is incredible, almost one knife for one ingredient, definitely one knife for one particular type of fish. The herbs are cut very finely which gives a subtle and distinct flavor to the dish. I ate this daikon dish in a small Izakaya pub serving small dishes and sake, wine, beer and other types of alcohol in Kyoto. I had no idea what to expect, but the owner told me that this would be good for me, so I let her decide. Basically daikon is a big radish, some are smaller, some are bigger. Western supermarkets in San Francisco like Whole Foods carry them, but for this steak, you need a large one about 10 cm diameter, available in Japan town at Nijiya supermarket. The original dish in Kyoto was served without any herbs. I took the liberty to add herbs at the end. Adding them or not adding them would be your choice. I got this recipe from my Japanese neighbor, Rui. This dish is very simple to make yet delicious. In a pan, heat olive oil, and brown daikon on both sides at high temperature about minutes. Add a little salt. Add butter and soy sauce, stir well coating the daikon and serve.
