Hello Everyone! In this video I wasn't sure what to call it but whatever it's called I think it's amazing and very important state of mind to be in!! I talk.

Believe it or not, I feel this way all the time. Know what I mean? So hello, welcome to my post on brain dumps. What exactly is a brain dump? A brain dump is pretty much exactly what it sounds like. What triggers a brain dump? How could you not? These will probably look slightly different for everyone, but for the most part, I think certain stressors or events leading up to a brain dump session are common. Here are times when I notice my brain getting way too full and stressed over and over: Noticing the pattern of when you feel overwhelmed is a powerful tool and it might help offset some of the stress. It helps you be more self-aware, which is always a good thing in my opinion. My Ultimate How To Guide for doing an effective Brain Dump

The beauty of brain dumps is they can be as simple or intricate as you need. Simply writing things out before bedtime, or everything you need to do or are thinking of, can be therapeutic enough. Cover everything you need to do, should do, have thought about doing, should think about doing, anything and everything without any sort of priority. What is bugging you? What is distracting you? What are you most dreading? What do you feel like you should be thinking about doing? Write it all down. Let yourself be random and unorganized. For the first go round, you just want to get everything out. It might be more helpful to think of it as personal, work, house-related, friends, weddings, errands, etc. Or whatever works for you! First write down everything at the forefront of your brain and then start going through different domains of your life and writing things down as they pertain to that area such as self-care, deadlines, stuff at work or related to a particular client, house things, etc. But keep it near you so that as you think of new things, you can add to it. Schedule a half day or a few hours usually ends up being a weekend day, but you gotta do what you gotta do! Go put you laundry in, send that thank you note, email someone back, organize all the errands you have and head out for a few hours, etc. Give them a space in your life to actually address them or get rid of them. But the point is that you want to simplify your list and be able to focus on as few things as possible. Trust me, it will help you be more productive. For the things that are emotional or more personal feeling blah about your weight or your closet is a disaster, schedule things that will help: Same thoughts, over and over. Why do I love brain dumps? I look at the fact that my life usually gets organized as the icing on top, but for me, this is mainly about mental clarity. What does your technique look like? What are your triggers?

The Live Player app is necessary to connect to Visual Studio and load your app. Your app will appear on your phone! Remember, this just allows you to easily get the app on your phone for testing. If you want to build a deployment package and send it to the store you still need a Mac connected to Visual Studio.
