So, this book was an eye-opener for me. It shows that over time, Jews have answered the question "What happens when we die? In the TaNaCh, or Hebrew bible, you can find passages that imply we simply cease to exist, and passages that refer to a shadowy continued existence in an underworld but nothing like the Hades of Greek myth or the Hell of Christian lore. Later, you start to see two ideas, bodily resurrection and spiritual immortality, that coexist in various ways. At different times, different Jewish thinkers have believed: We die and the breath of life leaves our bodies, but God will blow it back into us at the end of days and we will live again. No mention of a soul 2. No mention of resurrection 3. We die and are immediately "resurrected" as souls, perhaps with some body-like qualities like personality, and we live forever in that manner. In other words, immortality IS the way we come back to life. Our bodies die, and our souls are reincarnated. Our bodies die, and "sparks" of our souls show up along with sparks of other souls in a new body and a new life. The only immortality we have, or need, is in the influence and the memories we leave behind. I find I personally believe in aspects of 3 and 6. I would rate the book higher than the 3. It may be worth your while. I picked this book up to help get some perspective on that question. It confirmed that only three or four OT passages speak of a future resurrection and fewer to none speak about the future state of heaven. I have no problem with that. My question is about the huge change in subject we assume the NT makes. Protestants, especially, assume that the gospel and the book of Romans are all and only about getting into heaven. We think Scripture and especially Paul are concerned only with that question. At the same time, the apostle Paul repeatedly cites Isaiah in Romans, and we automatically assume that Paul is constantly talking about heaven-before-God throughout Romans even New Perspective types like NT Wright still assume a lot of heaven. Instead of assuming Romans is talking about how to get into heaven, try it as an exercise to "assume Isaiah" and no concern for heaven, unless Paul makes a clear and explicit change in subject. Romans becomes a completely different book.
