Development[edit] Animal House was the first film produced by National Lampoon , the most popular humor magazine on college campuses in the mids. When most of the Lampoon group moved on to SNL except for Harold Ramis , Reitman approached him with an idea to make a film together using some skits from the Lampoon Show. Ramis drew from his own fraternity experiences as a member of Zeta Beta Tau fraternity at Washington University in St. Ivy League kind of school". Kenney, Miller and Ramis began brainstorming ideas. Reitman and Simmons pitched it to various Hollywood studios. Simmons met with Ned Tanen , an executive at Universal Studios. Ramis remembers, "We went further than I think Universal expected or wanted. I think they were shocked and appalled. And we had a lot of scenes that were almost orgies of vomit Landis then met with Mount, Reitman and Simmons and got the job. But it was really offensive. There was a great deal of projectile vomiting and rape and all these things". Chase was a star from Saturday Night Live, which had recently become a cultural phenomenon. His name would have added credibility to the project, but he turned the film down to do Foul Play ; [6] Landis, who wanted to cast unknown [4] dramatic actors [7] [6] such as Bacon and Allen the first film for both instead of famous comedians, [6] takes credit for subtly discouraging Chase by describing the film as an " ensemble ". The character of D-Day was based on Aykroyd, who was a motorcycle aficionado. Aykroyd was offered the part, but he was already committed to Saturday Night Live. Landis did offer Ramis a smaller part, but he declined. Webb ultimately backed out due to concerns over his clean-cut image, and was replaced by John Vernon. Landis worked with Belushi on his character, who "hardly had any dialogue"; [4] [12] they decided that Bluto was a cross between Harpo Marx and the Cookie Monster. Schooling refused permission to film there after reading the script. After he consulted with other senior administrative colleagues who advised him to turn it down due to the lack of artistic merit, the college campus scenes set at Berkeley were shot at USC in Los Angeles. The film went on to become a classic, and Boyd was determined not to make the same mistake twice when the producers inquired about filming at Oregon. After consulting with student government leaders and officers of the Pan Hellenic Council, the Director of University Relations advised the president that the script, although raunchy and often tasteless, was a very funny spoof of college life. Around , it was acquired by the Psi Deuteron chapter of Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity and was their chapter house until , when the chapter was closed due to low membership. The house was sold and slid into disrepair, with the spacious porch removed and the lawn graveled over. A large boulder placed to the west of the parking entrance displays a bronze plaque commemorating the Delta House location. Principal photography[edit] Filming commenced in the autumn of , [13] [19] [21] and Landis brought the actors who played the Deltas up five days early in order to bond. There was a lot of getting to know each other and calling each other by our character names. Belushi and his wife Judy rented a house in south Eugene in order to keep him away from alcohol and drugs; [6] [13] she remained in Oregon while he commuted to New York City for Saturday Night Live. Although the cast members were warned against mixing with the college students, [4] one night, some girls invited several of the cast members to a fraternity party. They arrived assuming they had been invited and were greeted with open hostility. His wife Deborah Nadoolman purchased most of the costumes at local thrift stores, and she and Judy Belushi made the party togas. He fell to the ground and pretended to be unconscious. The reporters were completely fooled, and when Landis asked McGill to get up, he refused to move. The crowd loved it and the filmmakers realized they had a potential hit on their hands.
