Chapter 1 : You're Not Elected, Charlie Brown Review | DReager1's Blog

You're Not Elected, Charlie Brown is the eighth prime-time animated TV special produced based upon the popular comic strip Peanuts by Charles M. Schulz, and the 10th one to air.

Lucy Robin Kohn conducts a poll that says he would lose if he ran, so Charlie Brown chooses not to run. But Linus decides to run for President. Some of the people she polls are bullied by Lucy into saying they think Linus would make a good President. Lucy books Linus on a local talk show that takes phone questions. This turns out to be a waste of time, as none of the callers asks a cogent question. He promises wide-sweeping changes, including raises for teachers and custodians and safety for any dog who shows up on the playground. He says his first act as President will be to meet with the school board. But the crowd eats up everything Linus says, cheering and clapping for him. The crowd goes crazy for Linus! It seems like Linus will cruise to victory. Schroeder thinks Snoopy will make Linus appear more "homey". But then Linus commits a campaign "gaffe". During his last speech before the election, he goes on a tangent about his belief in the Great Pumpkin! Linus is laughed off stage, Lucy and Charlie Brown freak out about this. Go ahead and say it, I know you want to say it". On election day, the vote is very close. It may come down to one or two votes. Votes are cast and counted. Will his speech about the Great Pumpkin come back to haunt him? The original voice cast is gone, but it has the same look and great Vince Guaraldi music of the classic specials. It seems like every Presidential Election and many Senatorial and Gubernatorial Elections has one infamous campaign gaffe. Not a bad scene, but it has nothing to do with the "election" storyline. This special has been released on dvd several times and is also available as streaming video on Amazon. Also the watercolored autumnal backgrounds in the outdoor scenes are rather wonderful. In addition to the somewhat extraneous subplots J. Morris mentions above, I also wondered about Sally having a locker at school at all. Is it common for elementary school kids to have lockers? It struck me as weird based on my personal experience in school.

Chapter 2 : You're Not Elected, Charlie Brown (TV Movie) - Quotes - IMDb

You're Not Elected, Charlie Brown is the eighth prime-time animated television special based on Charles M. Schulz's comic strip Peanuts, and the tenth one to air. It originally aired on CBS on October 29,

These specials are always quite short, but make for fun adventures with the cast. Charlie himself gets a really small role this time around so Linus is the one who has to take the center stage this time around. Does he have what it takes to hold the special? The class is getting ready to pick their Student President which is naturally how it ties into Election Day. Charlie Brown and the others figure that Linus would make a good candidate and he agrees. However, there is one student who is running against him. Kids start to doubt in his abilities. What should have been a clear win is now turning into a very close battle. We still do have some nice Snoopy scenes where he builds himself a big breakfast though. He does seem to lose some common sense in this special though like when he brought up the Great Pumpkin. I can see him going on a long speech about why he would make for a great president though so that makes sense. I was also glad that the real principal got a lot of props here. The kids think they have the advantage at first when they see him sweating, but it turns out that the guy was probably just laughing. He set the record straight very quickly. As always the animation is pretty consistent with the rest of the Peanut specials. They all look the same so the animators are definitely pretty experienced. Overall, This is a pretty fun special. At most you may just wish Charlie Brown had run for President since I think that probably would have been a little more entertaining. Of course, he would have been doomed from the start though so this way at least you can believe that Linus not only has a chance, but a pretty good chance at winning this. What could have worked would have been to have Charlie run against Linus instead of Russell, but that could have also ended up being super emotional or tragic so as always it would be a tough balance to keep in mind.

Chapter 4 : Holiday Film Reviews: You're Not Elected, Charlie Brown

There's a reason for this; the first time it aired, it was called, "You're Elected, Charlie Brown," and used the theme music with that title. However, sometime after that, presumably somebody noticed that, as Charlie Brown wasn't actually elected, the title made no sense, so the title was changed, and the theme music changed to a different song.
